Weyerhaeuser is the #1 destroyer of endangered old-growth forests in North America. Only 22 percent of our Earth's original forests are still large enough to sustain themselves. If left to companies like Weyerhaeuser, every last ancient tree will be turned into disposable cardboard boxes, grocery bags and copy paper.

Weyerhaeuser – A Destructive Company

Appearances can be deceiving. Weyerhaeuser stamps "the future is growing" on its consumer products, but the future of our forests is in danger. Only a fraction of the world's original old-growth forests are still standing. Considering this fact, it is almost impossible to believe that Weyerhaeuser refuses to adopt a global policy to protect the natural heritage of future generations. It is time for Weyerhaeuser to assure you that its logging operations and procurement policies do not destroy irreplaceable endangered forests.

Weyerhaeuser's destructive practices span the globe:

- In North America: Weyerhaeuser is the #1 destroyer of old-growth forests, clearcutting areas like Canada's ancient Boreal forests as well as taxpayer-owned U.S. public lands.
- In South America: Weyerhaeuser controls hundreds of thousands of acres of ecologically barren tree farms and may soon start spreading genetically-manipulated trees.
- In Asia: Weyerhaeuser's wood purchases from critically endangered tropical rainforests throughout Southeast Asia have a well-documented history of promoting corruption and illegal logging throughout the region.
- Globally: Weyerhaeuser is opposing third-party audits that would verify ethical environmental practices and independently certify wood and paper products as sustainable.

In September 2003, Rainforest Action Network entered into good faith negotiations with Weyerhaeuser to help it find sustainable forestry solutions and end its egregious environmental practices worldwide. In February 2004, negotiations broke down when Weyerhaeuser refused to respond to reasonable requests to meet the same basic environmental standards already set by over 400 leading companies.

It is time for Weyerhaeuser to catch up with modern social values and immediately:

- phase out all logging and purchasing of wood products from endangered and old-growth forests everywhere in the world;
- stop converting biologically rich forests to ecologically barren industrial tree farms;
- stop recklessly experimenting with genetically-manipulated trees;
- maximize recycled content and use of alternative fibers in all of its paper products;
- stop logging on taxpayer-owned U.S. public lands;
- meet or exceed forestry standards certified by the Forest Stewardship Council. (The Forest Stewardship Council is an independent, international organization that sets the highest standards for ecologically responsible, socially beneficial and economically viable forestry.)

Buy Good Wood

RAN invites you to collaborate with us to transform the wood and paper industry. We encourage you to stop buying, selling, using or distributing Weyerhaeuser products until it agrees to a global environmental policy that will permanently protect forests now. Your company's decision to buy good wood will help lead Weyerhaeuser out of old-growth and other endangered forests forever.

Since the first Earth Day over 30 years ago, the global marketplace has evolved to seek a natural balance between the needs of a sustainable economy and a healthy environment. We urge you to join Citigroup, Bank of America, Home Depot, Staples, Hallmark, Kinko's and over 400 other companies that have already introduced environmental ethics to their bottom line. We sincerely hope that your company will also embrace 21st century values and work with us to help protect endangered forests and meet consumer demand for environmentally ethical wood and paper products.

Did you know that over 400 U.S. companies have profited by adopting environmentally ethical policies that ban the purchase of endangered old-growth wood?

Did you know that old-growth forests help stabilize Earth's atmosphere and protect us from catastrophic climate change?

Did you know that your company's wood and paper purchases have a profound impact on our forests and future?

DON'T BUY FROM COSTCO WHOLESALE

Kirkland-based COSTCO WHOLESALE continues to purchase products made from old growth forests here in the Northwest by logging giant Weyerhaeuser.

This is not acceptable! If you are a COSTCO shopper, tell your store to Boycott Weyerhaeuser, Boycott Old Growth.

Weyerhaeuser: Old-Growth Forest Destroyer

Logging, distributing and selling old growth and endangered forest products is a barbaric, outdated practice that has entered its endgame in the American marketplace. More than 400 global companies have already dissociated their businesses from endangered forest destruction, including American forest products company Boise Cascade.

Yet Weyerhaeuser, a U.S. forestry giant that claims to be an environmental leader, remains North America's top logger and distributor of forest products from old growth and endangered forests. Clearly, Weyerhaeuser is on the wrong side of history.

Weyerhaeuser needs to catch up with modern values and fundamentally change its business practices. The Seattle Rainforest Action Group demands that Weyerhaeuser immediately phase out all logging and procurement of wood products from endangered forests.

In the 21st century we all understand the need to adopt business practices that value the environment. Conducting an environmentally responsible business includes choosing vendor relationships with companies that share your strong principles. We are very worried that Costco - a company that we would like to support - is doing business with one of the most ethically bankrupt companies in operation today. We are asking Costco to cancel their contract with Weyerhaeuser, the number one destroyer of old-growth and endangered forests in North America.

In the last 100 years companies like Weyerhaeuser contributed to the destruction of nearly 80 percent of our planet's original forests. You may not be aware of the degree to which your company's purchases from Weyerhaeuser factor into the destruction of these last remaining forests. However, stores like Costco are in the unique position to become part of the solution—to transform the wood and paper industry by not supporting companies like Weyerhaeuser.

Please urge the corporate decision makers at Costco to introduce environmental ethics into the bottom-line of Costco. Already, corporations both large and small, including Boise Cascade, Citibank, Kinko's and hundreds of others have committed to not purchasing products from endangered forests. We sincerely hope that your company will also embrace 21st century values and work with us to help protect endangered forests and meet consumer demand for environmentally ethical wood and paper products. # Weyerhaeuser in the United States

Overview

With operations in 44 states, Weyerhaeuser is one of the leaders in forest destruction on both private and public lands in the United States. Most of Weyerhaeuser's logging takes place on the company's private lands, away from the watchful eyes of wildlife and forest advocates and strict government laws and regulations. Private lands make up about 7.4 million - or 90 percent - of Weyerhaeuser's seven million acres of operation in the U.S.

Despite its green "tree growing" mantra, Weyerhaeuser continues to log old growth forests, eliminate endangered species and habitats, and replace natural forests with residential sprawl and ecologically barren industrial tree plantations. While the company remains a major force in Washington and Oregon, Weyerhaeuser appears to be increasingly shifting its operations away from the Pacific Northwest and toward the Southeast.

In addition, Weyerhaeuser's decision to lower costs and move operations overseas results in massive worker layoffs and lowers worker protections for its employees in the United States.

Weyerhaeuser in the Pacific Northwest

With its headquarters in Federal Way, Washington, Weyerhaeuser is one of the region's largest employers. Weyerhaeuser currently owns 2.5 million acres in the Pacific Northwest, almost all of which have been converted from old growth forests to industrial tree plantations composed of Douglas fir and hemlock.

As one of the region's heaviest loggers, Weyerhaeuser's tree farms impact the Pacific Northwest's natural environment. According to the Environmental Protection Agency, Weyerhaeuser is the number one polluter of Washington State's waterways, emitting hundreds of thousands of pounds of toxic and carcinogenic chemicals into the state's streams and rivers. Washington State happens to have the most polluted waterways in the nation.

Weyerhaeuser also regularly converts or sells its private timbered land to real estate developers, contributing to urban sprawl, unsustainable development, an increase in private car transportation and additional pollution. In 2004, Weyerhaeuser is facing community opposition to its plans to sell off and develop its forested land in Pierce, King and Snohomish Counties, and in Vail City, Washington.

Weyerhaeuser regularly plays a heavy hand in influencing legislation. In 2004, Weyerhaeuser lobbied for a relaxation of the Washington's clean water laws; the proposed legislation would introduce "flexibility" into the rules requiring industry to clean up waterborne pollution, and essentially eliminate the process of proving whether companies are abiding by the state's pollution standards.

Case Study: Huckleberry Land Exchange, Oregon

In the 1998 Huckleberry Land Exchange, the Forest Service traded 4,400 acres of heavily forested public lands in the Cascade Mountains in Washington for 30,000 acres of mostly logged Weyerhaeuser land. A legal challenge was raised by the Muckleshoot Indian tribe, the Pilchuck Audubon Society and the Huckleberry Mountain Protection Society.

On May 19, 1999, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the Forest Service violated environmental laws and ordered Weyerhaeuser to stop logging the land until an environmental impact analysis could be conducted. Unfortunately, by that point Weyerhaeuser had already logged 10 percent of the land. In November 2001 a settlement was finally reached, with the Forest Service paying $6 million to buy back 17 percent of the land it had traded to Weyerhaeuser.

It is clear who came out on top - Weyerhaeuser sold the land it could no longer profit from, was given new land full of mature forests to log, and was paid $6 to return a few hundred acres of the gift.

Weyerhaeuser in the Southeast

The forests of the southern part of the United States are under assault: with private holdings of 5 million acres and as the number one buyer of timber in the Southeast, Weyerhaeuser is the company that is leading the charge.

Although virtually all of the region's old growth forests were logged by the 20th century, recovering second-growth forests in the Southeast are some of the most biologically diverse in the country: they harbor the highest concentrations of tree species and tree diversity in North America; the nation's richest array of aquatic species, and more listed endangered and threatened species than any other region of the country.

The southern U.S. is already home to one-half of the world's industrial tree farms, covering some 30 million acres. Experts expect that number to double over the next 20 years.

It is difficult to estimate the extent of the damage of Weyerhaeuser's logging operations on its private land. Considering the lack of regulatory oversight and legal statutes on private land in the South, coupled with Weyerhaeuser's history of aggressive land management in the Pacific Northwest, it is safe to assume that significant ecological damage is taking place.

One of Weyerhaeuser's more egregious impacts in the Southeast is its use of fiber from Tennessee's biologically diverse Cumberland Plateau. The Natural Resources Defense Council, a Washington, D.C.-based environmental group, recently named the Cumberland Plateau as one of its "Biogems", and thus defining it as one of the most critically endangered and ecologically diverse regions in the Americas.

Case Study: Ouachita Land Exchange, Arkansas

Weyerhaeuser's suspect method of acquiring taxpayer-funded public land in the Southeast is reflected in its involvement in the largest public land exchange deal in National Forest history.

The transaction, which took place in 1996, resulted in Weyerhaeuser receiving 47,000 acres of valuable mixed hardwood forests in the Ouachita National Forest in exchange for 180,000 acres of clear-cut loblolly pine.

With the active support of Arkansas Senator Dale Bumpers, the land exchange bill slid through Congress buried in a broader parks measure, known as the Omnibus Parks Bill.

The legislation barred the public from appealing the land exchange. Rules that required that all land exchanges be subjected to an in-depth environmental analysis and a formal appraisal of the land's worth were similarly disbanded.

Weyerhaeuser is taking the American public for a financial joyride with its land exchanges and logging of high-value timber from public lands.

Take Action For Our Forests

With more than 400 of America's top companies committing to phase out of the sale and distribution of old growth and endangered wood products, it is time to "Wake up Weyerhaeuser!" RAN will pressure Weyerhaeuser by targeting its customers and urging them to drop contracts with the company until Weyerhaeuser executives realize that environmental misconduct does not pay.

Dear Costco Employee,

We are here today because Costco Wholesale sells paper products made by Weyerhaeuser, the number one destroyer of old-growth and endangered forests in North America. We would like you to contact Costco CEO, Jim Sinegal, (425) 213-8163, and tell him that we are demonstrating in your store today to protest your business-relationship with Weyerhaeuser. Mr. Sinegal has refused to meet with Rainforest Action Network to address our concerns. We will be actively contacting our friends and allies across the country in order to express our concerns about Costco Wholesale following this demonstration.

In the 21st century we all understand the need to adopt business practices that value the environment. # RAN's Wake Up Weyerhaeuser Campaign

Overview

Weyerhaeuser's tentacles reach all over the globe, with timber operations or offices in 44 states, Canada and 18 other nations. In 2003, the corporation enjoyed profits of $277 million on revenues of over $18.5 billion. Weyerhaeuser is the 2nd largest distributor of wood products in the U.S, and the world's largest supplier of lumber.

Weyerhaeuser owns over six million acres of land in the U.S. and logs an average of over 70,000 acres per year on U.S. National Forests. In Canada, the company has access to log 32.5 million acres of public land.

Weyerhaeuser should catch up with modern values by taking the following steps immediately:

DEMAND #1

Phase out all logging and procurement of wood products from endangered and old growth forests globally

Logging old growth forests – and distributing and selling old growth forest products – is a barbaric, outdated practice that has entered its endgame in the American marketplace. More than four hundred global companies have already dissociated themselves from endangered and old growth forest destruction, including American forest products company Boise Cascade Corporation.

Despite this, Weyerhaeuser remains the #1 logger of old growth forests in North America. Unlike other leading businesses, Weyerhaeuser has failed to acknowledge the evolving demands of consumers and refuses to respond to the global deforestation crisis. Clearly, Weyerhaeuser is on the wrong side of history.

DEMAND #2

Cease conversion of native forests to plantations

Despite its "tree growing" mantra, Weyerhaeuser's system of converting native forests into industrial tree plantations turns biologically diverse regions into toxic, ecologically-starved tree farms. After the native forest is cut, the land is bulldozed and burned to eliminate all native fauna, including trees, shrubs, vines, fungi, grasses and wildflowers. Hybridized, genetically identical trees are then planted in evenly spaced rows.

Any native vegetation that returns is cut or sprayed with herbicides and the plantation is regularly sprayed with pesticides to limit insect infestations. The company then applies chemical fertilizers to encourage faster growth. In Oregon and Washington, the company has already converted 2.5 million acres of old-growth forests into industrial tree plantations. In the South, the company converted 5 million acres of native forests into monoculture farms. Now, Weyerhaeuser is increasingly pushing its plantations internationally in Australia, New Zealand and Uruguay.

Activists hung a banner in February 2004 to launch the campaign against Weyerhaeuser in Seattle, Washington. Credit: Garth Lenz

Cease experimentation with genetically-engineered trees

Weyerhaeuser is affiliated with the Tree Genetic Engineering Research Cooperative (TGERC) and the Plant Molecular Genetics Cooperative (PMGC). Both associations heavily fund and support genetically engineered tree research. Without a clear understanding of the consequences that genetic engineering may pose to these symbiotic relationships, any large-scale use of GE trees poses serious potential hazards to the environment, biodiversity and human health.

DEMAND #4

Halt logging on and sourcing from U.S. public lands

According to the U.S. Forest Service, from the period 1991 to 2000, Weyerhaeuser was the fourth largest purchaser of timber from federal lands. During the same time, the company was also the #1 buyer of timber sales in the Southeast and the #1 buyer of timber sales in the Deschutes National Forest in Oregon. Weyerhaeuser has also been accused of illegal logging the country's national forests for the past decade. The Timber Theft Task Force, formed in 1991 to investigate tree stealing on federal lands, compiled evidence that Weyerhaeuser stole more than 88,000 trees valued at more than $5 million from the Winema National Forest in Southern Oregon.

DEMAND #5

Pursue Forest Stewardship Council certification for forestry operations

If Weyerhaeuser is truly interested in sustainably managed forests, it should certify its operations under with the Forest Stewardship Council (FSC), a not-for-profit organization formed by environmental, social and economic interests to support and certify "environmentally appropriate, socially beneficial and economically viable management of the world's forests." Instead, Weyerhaeuser uses depends on certification from the industry-backed "Sustainable Forestry Initiative" (SFI) – a program developed in 1994 by the American Forest & Paper Association, the largest association of loggers in the world. The SFI represents the "Same Old-Forest Industry" – it is a new green coat of paint over the same tired practices of companies like Weyerhaeuser.

Maximize post-consumer recycled content across all product lines

Americans consume over 190 billion pounds of paper a year: most of which is derived of virgin tree fiber and ends up in landfills. Yet paper with high post-consumer recycled content performs just as well as non-recycled paper. Weyerhaeuser can protect endangered forests, reduce toxic chemicals and greenhouse gas emissions, and limit the amount of waste it produces by increasing the post-consumer recycled content in its paper, packaging, and other product lines.

Take Action For Our Forests

With more than 400 of America's top companies committing to phase out of the sale and distribution of old growth and endangered wood products, it is time to "Wake up Weyerhaeuser!" RAN will pressure Weyerhaeuser by targeting its customers and urging them to drop contracts with the company until Weyerhaeuser executives realize that environmental misconduct does not pay.

[redacted] Costco store. [redacted] telephone [redacted] was interviewed at her second place of employment, [redacted] work telephone [redacted] cellular telephone [redacted]. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing Agents and the purpose of the interview, [redacted] provided the following information:

b7C

On March 11, 2005, [redacted] was working as [redacted]. While working she saw a young white female pushing a Costco shopping cart down an aisle. The female, later identified as [redacted] had three bundles of paper bags in the cart. [redacted] saw [redacted] remove something from her purse and stick the item inside the bundles of bags. [redacted] took the bundle of bags and placed them back on a shelf. [redacted] did the same thing to the other bundles in her cart.

[redacted] went to the bundle placed on the shelf and looked for the item placed inside the bundle. [redacted] located a rectangular paper sticker stuck on the paper bags. The sticker denounced Weyerhaeuser for cutting down old growth forests. The stickers, approximately five and one half inches long by four inches wide, carried the image of a red and white cigarette package and had the website addresses of www.wakeupweyco.com and www.ran.org printed on the bottom of the sticker.

On 03-11-05, at approx. <sup>1815</sup>hrs, I was working on the east side of the store on aisle B, when I noted a young w/f pushing a cart that contained bags of paper sacks that we sell. She rolled into an aisle and started pulling what appeared to me at the time, to be photos, out of her purse and inserting them under the wrappers that encircled the bags. She then reached into her purse and pulled another one out and stuck it on the bag and set it on the steel and quickly rolled east down the aisle. I picked up the bag and noticed that it had a sticker on it that looked like a cigarette package protesting Weyerhaeuser and the cutting of trees. It included an email address on the bottom of the sticker : www.wakeupweyco.com and www.ran.org. See attached photos of the stickers. I watched her as she stuck these stickers on two more bags and inserted what later turned out to be flyers in the bags and leave them in various places in the store where they would be seen by the customers.

I immediately radio'd  and asked him to meet me on aisle A. Right after I radio'd him she walked away from the last bag and I approached her carrying the first package of wrapped bags that I had seen her place on the steel and ID'd myself, told her my name and stated that I worked  and wanted to know what she was doing. She admitted to putting the stickers on the bags. I explained that what she was doing was considered property destruction/malicious mischief and that I wanted to talk to her in the office. I asked her name and she did not want to provide it. I asked if she had ID on her and she stated that she didn't. I stated that it might be a good idea to carry her ID on her if she was going to be doing this kind of thing. She then provided her first name, and when I asked for her last name, she again refused. I was joined by  showed him what she was doing and we escorted her back to the office.

b7C

At this point she provided  Driver's License  On the way back to the office she had told me that she/"they" had talked to  asked if he had ok'd her/"them" to come in and put stickers on his property. She replied that he hadn't.

b6

had asked her where the guy he had seen her with earlier was. She denied knowing what he was talking about. Upon a further search of the warehouse, more stickers on packages of bags (at this time, per  50) and on the steel and more pamphlets were found.

b6
b7C

I asked  if she had a membership and she replied that she didn't. I asked her how she got in and she replied that she just walked in the store.

was CT'd from all Costco's for a period of two years from today's date. Shoreline PD was called at approx 1850 hrs.

b6
b7C

The value of the bags that she defaced were Item 6336, 500 count, $8.99; #4069 500 count $17.69; and #4062 500 count $6.24...Total $32.92. Each package of brown paper bags are a different size.

The above is true and I will assist in prosecution.

Is there any explanation for your actions?: Costco carries Weyerhaeuser products, a logging company that I strongly feel is cutting down my future. Costco hasn't agreed to become an environmentally ethical company by continuing to carry Weyerhaeuser products. I felt that maybe this could make them realize how Did you know what you did was wrong?: Wrong Weyerhaeuser's practices are.
How were you treated by our employees? _____

I certify that the above information is true and correct.
